The country litrough which we passed, was merely a continuation of the scenery below Muonicoiska—low, wooded hills, white plains and everywhere more, snow, allenne and death. The cold increased to 30 deg, below zero, obliging me-to bury my nose in my boa and to keep up a vigorous exercise of my loss sto prevent item from freesing, as it is impossible to cover one's boots in pulk. The sight was eaim, oless and starry, but after an hour a bank of auroral light gradually arose in the north, and formed abroad arch which threw its linstre over the most and lighted up our path.
